A Bright New Idea in Chocolate

Detroit-based chef Jimmy Schmidt and candymaker Tom Morley Jr. have developed a new line of chocolate bars fortified with herbal ingredients and sold under the label Smart Chocolate through the Functional Foods Co., Roseville, Mich.

The new one-ounce bars have truffle centers and are available in four varieties: Passion, Screnity, Memory and Energy. Each bar has a suggested retail price of $1.99.

The Passion Bar contains Damiana, Ginseng, Sarsaparilla and Gotu Kola, which are said to work together to stimulate the nervous system. The Serenity Bar combines St. John's Wort, Kava Kava and Ginseng and is designed to relieve stress. The Memory Bar contains Ginkgo, Ginseng and Yerba Mate — ingredients said to contribute to improved brain function and cerebral blood flow. The fourth variety, the Energy Bar, contains Ginseng, Guarana, Gotu Kola, Yerba Mate and green tea — a formulation said to enhance energy level.

"When Jimmy and I decided to get into the organic channel, we did so because of a) our basic belief in sustainable agriculture/organic farming; b) the lack of high quality organic chocolate; and c) the thought of adding herbs as the value-added part of the concept," says Morley. "The organic category has seen double-digit growth over the past five years with no let up in sight."

Currently sold in chains including General Nutrition Center and Whole Foods, Smart Chocolate is targeted to health-conscious females ages 18 to 54.
